

Cavemen Are Out-of-Date

"Come gather round cavechildren and you shall see,
how humankind version 2 came to be.
We started out simple; we once were like you.
But then we got smart and good-looking too!
We're the latest and greatest - we're better - brand-new!"

"Oh, I get it," softly spoke up Sabre-tooth Sue,
"you think new is improved and old is poo-poo.
We're like children you say - and that is true.
But like children, there's things that you once knew
... things that you probably need to review."

"Oh silly, simple, Sabre-tooth Sue,
our science constantly has a break-through.
We decide to control or let nature be.
Our machines have practically set us free.
Why, we've practically re-invented the TREE!"

"Compared to you, we're so darn advanced,
that our theory of everything
leaves nothing to chance.
We have almost jettisoned happenstance!
Frankly, you cavefolk are in a ghost dance."

"We've distanced your kind - you're Out-of-Date.
Get over it now - you've an empty plate!
It's now our turn and we've got in hand,
the earth and the people of every land;
we discuss matters you just can't understand."

"I'm sure you are right," mentioned Sabre-tooth Sue.
"Our time has passed. I'm sure that's quite true.
But you still haven't learned some things that we knew.
Your arrogant rants seem to foster a cue -
the Out-of-Date message is really for you!"
