

#62 The Three Chipmunks

On a very high mountain lived three chipmunks. They longed to explore the valley below and join in the festivities they constantly witnessed. Day in and day out they saw picnics and parties. The chipmunks in the valley wore colorful outfits as they took on various jobs and they seemed to have a plethora of reasons to stop work and celebrate with music and bountiful meals. The oldest of the three mountain chipmunks spoke up one day and declared that she was ready for the valley. She already knew that her lifework had to do with BELIEF and down in the valley were plenty of opportunities for this type of service. Perhaps she would become a physician and help other chipmunks believe that they could be healed. She had only to decide which family she would join. Suddenly, the sound of a wonderful party reached all of the way up the mountain. They could hear two parents encouraging their offspring. “You can achieve whatever you believe!” the parents said. “Now, that’s the food I need!” exclaimed the oldest chipmunk. She bade the others farewell, and hastened down the mountain to become a child, once again.
