

#64 The Two Dolphins

Two dolphins frequented the shores of a fishing village. “You have the ability to sense feelings, my friend,” commenced the first dolphin, “what would you say about the people in this village?” “I think that they are quite gentle and kind on the whole,” answered the other dolphin, “but they are humans. They have some members of the village that are, what they would call ‘bad apples.’” “What do you mean?” asked the first. Her friend replied, “Humans are not like the rest of nature. They can say a body is healthy, while not healing a bad kidney - a village is healthy without aiding homeless members - a family is happy without assisting a deprived child.” “I see,” joined in the first dolphin, “they cannot simultaneously embrace the whole and its parts.”
