

#94 The Tortoise and the Lizard

A very young and very frisky lizard came running up to his friend the tortoise. The lizard had a dozen new ideas of what he might invent today. “Oh, the possibilities are endless!” exclaimed the lizard. “Slow down there,” began the tortoise, “if you start all of your creations at once, you won’t get any done. And they will tangle you up like a ball of string.” “That’s so often true,” said the lizard, “what do you do when you see oh-so many colors of oh-so many inventions in your mind? I mean, how do you even get started?” “That’s easy,” replied the tortoise, “I close my eyes and let the parade pass on through. Then I select one and do it.”
